Coronation

Seven of the main pieces used in the Coronation of a British Monarch. THE St. EDWARD'S CROWN :- Gold, 5lb in weight, set with precious and semi precious stones. Made for Charles II in 1661, but believed to contain the ancient crown of Edward the confessor. THE IMPERIAL STATE CROWN: Contains The Black Prince's Ruby, The Stuart Sapphire, The 2nd Star of Africa Diamond (317.40 Cts) and over 3000 other precious gems and pearls. THE SOVEREIGN'S SCEPTRE WITH THE CROSS: Made for Charles II in 1661, but altered during 1910, when the '1st Star of Africa' diamond (530 cts. the largest in the world) was added. THE SOVEREIGN'S ORB:- made in 1661 for Charles II - held by the Sovereign as 'Defender of the Faith'. THE COMMONWEALTH BRACELETS - (Armilli) were a gift to Queen Elizabeth II, for her coronation in 1953. THE CORONATION RING:- Made for William IV in 1831, has been used since by all monarchs except Queen Victoria.

Coronation

The Cullinan III and IV, known as the Lesser Stars of Africa were set as a brooch by Queen Mary in 1910. It is the single most valuable item owned by the Queen, who inherited the pieces of jewellery made from the Cullinan cleavings on the death of her grandmother in 1953. The pear drop (III) of 94.4 carats hangs from (IV), a square cut stone of 63.6 carats. On 25th March 1958, while on a State Visit to Holland, the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh made a tour of the Asscher diamond works, and in talking about the cutting of the Cullinan diamond fifty years earlier, she referred to the Cullinan III and IV brooch as 'Granny's chips', which became the nickname for these stones. This was the first occasion on which the Queen had ever worn the brooch, and during the afternoon she unpinned it and handed it to Louis Asscher who had been a witness as his brother cleaved the stone. The elderly man, nearly blind, was deeply moved that Her Majesty had brought the Cullinans with her, knowing how much it would mean to him to see them again.

Coronation- George IV Diadem Ring

From its frequent appearance on postage stamps and coins, this exceptionally beautiful head ornament, incorporating the national emblems of England, Scotland and Ireland, is probably the most familiar piece of Her Majesty The Queen's jewellery. Today, the Diadem is worn by Her Majesty The Queen when travelling to and from the State Opening of Parliament.

Coronation Imperial

This set of jewellery is inspired by the pearls, diamonds and colours of stones and shapes appearing round of the Imperial State Crown. The best known of all the crowns, the present Imperial State Crown was originally designed and made for Queen Victoria's Coronation in 1838 by Rundell, Bridge and Rundell, the Crown Jewellers. This crown was used at the Coronation of King Edward VII and King George V. It was remade with practically the same stones for King George VI in 1937. For the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II in 1953 the shapes of the arches were altered to reduce the height. The jewels symbolise a lot more than precious stones, they represent virtues that a monarch should have. Pearls represent divine power, sapphires symbolise purity, chastity and sincerity and diamonds represent power, strength and courage. The crown itself is mounted in gold and silver. It weighs 2 pounds 13 ounces and is set 2,868, 17 sapphires, 11 emeralds, 5 rubies and 273 pearls. The most important and mystical of these stones are, St Edward's Sapphire. This sapphire is said to have been taken from a ring found on the finger of Edward the Confessor by Abbot Lawrence on 13th October 1163, when the body was being reinterred in Westminster Abbey. Henry II was present at the time. It was presented to the King, and it has been used by the Monarch ever since.

Princess Collection - Spencer Tiara Ring

This ring is inspired from a tiara mounted in gold in the form of stylized flowers decorated in diamonds in silver settings. The central element was a gift from Lady Sarah Spencer to Cynthia, Viscountess Althorp as a wedding present in 1919. It was worn as 'something borrowed' by Lady Diana Spencer when she married Prince Charles in 1981. It was returned to the Spencer Family in 1993

Princess Diana Choker

For her engagement to Prince Charles in 1981, Diana, Princess of Wales was given a large 20 carat sapphire brooch surrounded by two rows of diamonds as an engagement gift by Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother. Not being the type of person to wear a brooch, Diana later added rows of pearls to the brooch and turned it into a choker which she wore often, most well remembered was the night she danced at the White House with John Travolta in 1985.

Princess- Lover's Knot

This necklace is based on the design from the Cambridge Lovers Knot Tiara. Queen Mary had a tiara made which became known as the Cambridge Lover's Knot Tiara, but is perhaps best known as one of the tiaras worn by Diana, Princess of Wales, during her marriage. Mary had this beautiful tiara made in 1914 as a copy of the tiara given to her grandmother, Princess Augusta of Hesse, just before her marriage to the first Duke of Cambridge in 1818. In its original condition, it had pearl "spikes" at the top level, which Mary had removed around 1935. It was given to Princess Elizabeth as a wedding gift when she married Prince Phillip in 1947, and she in turn gave it to Princess Diana as a wedding present on the occasion of her marriage to Prince Charles in 1981.

Princess- Feathers

This necklace is inspired from a necklace worn by Princess Diana on many occasions with either an emerald or sapphire drop. Although the three feathers is commonly known as the Prince of Wales Feathers - it is actually the badge of the heir apparent, whether Prince of Wales or not. The badge comprises three silver ostrich feathers which rise through a coronet of crosses pattee and fleur-de-lisall gold, along with the motto 'ICH DIEN' (I Serve). The use of ostrich feathers in royal heraldry is first found during the reign of Edward III. The circumstance of their adoption is obscure, but may have derived through the house of Hainault; Edward III married Phillipa of Hainault in 1329. The feathers were later adopted by the Princes of Wales. There have been twenty one Princes of Wales since the title was first used. Prince Charles was created Prince of Wales on 26 July 1958, aged 9, and Queen Elizabeth II invested him with the symbols of his office on 1 July 1969 at Caernarfon Castle.

Imperial

This set of jewellery is inspired by the motif appearing just above the lower band of the Imperial State Crown. The best known of all the crowns, the present Imperial State Crown was originally designed and made for Queen Victoria's Coronation in 1838 by Rundell, Bridge and Rundell, the Crown Jewellers. This crown was used at the Coronation of King Edward VII and King George V. It was remade with practically the same stones for King George VI in 1937. For the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II in 1953 the shapes of the arches were altered to reduce the height. The jewels symbolise a lot more than precious stones, they represent virtues that a monarch should have. Pearls represent divine power, sapphires symbolise purity, chastity and sincerity and diamonds represent power, strength and courage. The crown itself is mounted in gold and silver. It weighs 2 pounds 13 ounces and is set 2,868 , 17 sapphires, 11 emeralds, 5 rubies and 273 pearls. The most important and mystical of these stones are, St Edward's Sapphire. This is a square sapphire set in the top cross. This sapphire is said to have been taken from a ring found on the finger of Edward the Confessor by Abbot Lawrence on 13th October 1163, when the body was being reinterred in Westminster Abbey. Henry II was present at the time. It was presented to the King, and it has been used by the Monarch ever since.

Queen Victoria Collet

This set is based on the Collet Necklace and Ear Rings found in the Royal Collection. The original is formed of twenty five graduated cushion shape brilliant cut diamonds set in cut down silver collets (settings) with gold spiral links, and a central drop shaped pendant set in platinum. The story begins in December 1857 when, as a result of a claim initiated by George III's fifth son, Ernest, Duke of Cumberland (from 1837 King of Hanover), Queen Victoria lost to Hanover a significant part of the family jewels she had regarded as her own. Greatly chagrined, she ordered Garrards to replace the lost jewels by taking stones from 'swords and useless things'. For this necklace, twenty eight stones were removed from two Garter badges and a sword hilt. At the same time, the central pendant of the Timur Ruby necklace, known as the Lahore diamond, was made detachable for use as the pendant on this necklace, and two of the smaller pendants from the same necklace, originally the side stones in the Indian setting of the Koh-i-Nur, were made detachable for use as earrings. In 1911, Queen Mary removed two stones from Queen Victoria's necklace to make up solitaire earrings. She replaced them with three stones from another necklace of 158 collets. For the 1937 Coronation of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, the Lahore Diamond was marginally recut, losing 0.12 of a carat, and set temporarily on the new crown made for Queen Elizabeth (the Queen Mother) by Garrards. After the Coronation, it was returned to the necklace. Either at this time, or subsequently the necklace was reduced in length by four stones. Both necklace and earrings were often worn by Queen Victoria, who bequeathed them to the Crown. Queen Alexandra and Queen Mary wore the necklace at their Coronations (1901 and 1911). Queen Elizabeth wore both necklace and earrings in 1937, as did Her Majesty the Queen in 1953.

Queen Victoria's Diamond Crown

On the death of her beloved husband, Prince Albert, in 1861, the grief-stricken Queen Victoria retreated into full mourning and, for a time withdrew from public life. In 1870, soon after she resumed some of her public duties, she commissioned this tiny diamond crown from Garrard & Co to wear on top of her widow's veil. The silver frame is set with 1,187 diamonds, which unlike coloured stones - were allowed during mourning. Being of small stature, she found the Imperial State Crown too heavy, and out of proportion to her size. She broke diamonds out of a necklace to create this small head ornament, which measures 9cm across, 10cm high and weighs just 6 ounces. Queen Victoria first wore her small diamond crown at the State Opening of Parliament on 9th February 1871 with the Imperial State Crown being carried on a cushion before her. It was an event she recorded in her diary; 'Wore a dress trimmed with ermine and my new small diamond crown over a veil, on my head'. The small crown, which Victoria wore frequently for the rest of her reign, came to symbolise her. Queen Victoria left the small diamond crown to the Crown; it was occasionally worn by Queen Alexandra and Queen Mary. Despite her advanced age, Victoria continued her duties to the end and on her death in 1901 the small crown was placed on her coffin at Osborn House before it was conveyed to London for the State Funeral.

Fringe Tiara

The necklace is inspired by one of Queen Elizabeth's II's favourite Tiara's. In 1893 a committee was formed by Lady Greville to raise money from the Girls of Great Britain & Northern Ireland to buy a wedding present for the then Princess Mary of Teck - later to become Queen Mary. They collectively raised £5,000 and bought a tiara from the Crown jewellers - Garrards. It was a festoon and scroll design, surmounted by nine large oriental pearls on diamond spikes. This was then mounted on a bandeau base of alternate round and lozenge collets between two bands of diamonds. It was adapted and worn by Queen Mary throughout her life, and in 1947 she gave it to Princess Elizabeth (Later to become Queen Elizabeth II) as a wedding gift. This was the first tiara the present Queen ever owned, which she still affectionately calls 'Granny's Tiara'.

Crown Monde

For the coronation of Empress Elizabeth, consort of Czar Alexander I a stunning new crown was made which echoed the design of the Crown made for Catherine II. Made in St. Petersburg in 1801, it is in the traditional Russian form, set entirely with diamonds. It is from the Monde of this crown that the design of this set of jewellery has been inspired.

Fleur de Lys

The Romans may have been the first to use the fleur de lys as a symbol of imperial power. The Empress Placidia wore a fleur de lys on her crown. On a painting in the church of St-Vital in Ravenna, Theodora, the wife of Emperor Justinian, is represented wearing a crown with the same symbol at its centre. On a seal from Charlemagne kept in Rome, the Emperor is represented with a crown decorated with several fleurs de lys. The 9th century Anglo-Saxon king, Alfred the Great, also wore a crown decorated with the same flowers. The term "fleur de lys" coming from the following elements. "Fleur", is the French word for flower. Although it is the same word, "lys" interestingly enough does not come from the French word "lys" for lily, the well-known garden flower. In fact, the royal symbol of fleur de lys doesn't look like a lily flower at all. Instead, the word "lys" comes from the Celtic word "li" (or "lly") which means king or ruler. The Celtic language was still widely spoken in Western Europe until the 10th or 11th century, but disappeared gradually after that. When the words "fleur de lys" were used for the first time in a written form at the time of Philippe II, they were written in Latin and became "flora lily". The real meaning of the words though, in the older spoken Celtic language, was "fleur de roi" or "flower of kings".

Queen Mary

This set is inspired from the arches of a crown made by Garrard for Queen Mary in 1911 for her Coronation as consort to King George V. Queen Mary presented it to the Crown Collection in 1914 with the intention of it being the future Queen consort's crown. It had been the tradition since Plantagenet times for a Queen not to attend the coronation of her successor. Queen Mary broke with this tradition in 1937, probably to show solidarity after the abdication of King Edward VIII, and wore the crown as a circlet without arches.

Inspired by a brooch known as the Harebells brooch. In 1892, the Women of Hampshire committee collected £775 to buy a wedding gift for Princess May of Teck and they had made a diamond and pearl pendant. By 1911 the pendant had been converted into a brooch and Queen Mary held possession on it until it passed to The Queen in 1953.

Durbar Emeralds

This set is inspired by the bottom part of the Durbar Emerald Necklace. At the end of 1911, the newly crowned George V and Queen Mary made an Imperial visit to India, where a great 'durbar', or grand court, was held at Delhi, at which tributes were given by the Indian Maharajahs and princes. A new Imperial Crown of India was made for the occasion, at a cost of £60,000 adorned with a large central emerald and eight smaller emeralds, four huge sapphires, four rubies and 6,000 diamonds. The royal couple received a large amount of jewellery as gifts, including a splendid set of emeralds. Queen Mary added these to the remaining six brilliants and ninety six chippings from the cutting of the Cullinan Diamond to make a fabulous necklace that she wore to the Durbar. Hanging from the central emerald of the necklace is Cullinan VI weighing 11.50 carats. The necklace passed to Queen Elizabeth II who wears it occasionally at State Banquets.

Empress Josephine of France Sapphire

This set of jewellery is inspired by a parure of jewels consisting of a diadem, a necklace, a pair of earrings and two small and one large brooch, all set with Ceylon sapphires. It is believed they were originally worn by The Empress Josephine jewels and given to her daughter Queen Hortense of Holland. But mystery surrounds the jewels, they cannot be dated and it is not known who made them. It has even been suggested that they may once have belonged to Marie Antoinette. It is known that it was worn by Queen Marie-Amélie of France, who divided the set amongst her grandchildren as they married and it was last with Isabelle of Orleans until it was sold to the Louvre, Paris.

Collectors Range Set of Miniatures

Our comprehensive Souvenir and Gift Range is designed by Suzan Findeisen, and is entirely hand made in England. The entire range has a Royal theme, based on The Crown Jewels, Famous Royal Jewellery or Heraldry. Many items are silver or gold plated, hand set with finest Swarovski Crystals and/or hand enamelled. The range is suitable for all events, and will evoke a reminder of a special visit or celebration. (Please note the pictures below are NOT to scale).
